A 750-sq-ft cozy, contemporary home has become an inspiration to modern urbanites. Text Nia Tam

When we talk about Nordic design styles, we often think of natural, simplistic style that has a warm ambience. Max Chan from Moderne Design House skillfully blends these essential elements into his latest project for a young couple.

This bright and delightful home is located at Bayview Garden.

Before beginning his design of the home, Max reconsidered the layout of the apartment, arranging a new configuration that best caters to the needs of the homeowners. He turned the three-bedroom apartment into a one-bedroom, one-study home with warm, inviting living spaces.

Inspired by nature, Max carefully chose materials and furniture that have a natural quality that fill up the spaces with light, warmth and comfort, and arranged them in a simplistic, minimalist style.

In the living room a huge L-shaped black leather sofa invites comfort, while the living room walls are clear and bold, giving the home an impressionable character. The husband was once concerned about the storage space for his beloved bike. Max's suggestion was to hang the bike on the wall, where it can adorn the plain white wall and become a relatable centerpiece of the living room.

The kitchen was given an overall white tone which fosters a European style of contemporary kitchens. The white tiles and modern fittings work wonderfully to facilitate intimate home cooking with convenience and style.

Turning to the bedroom, the plain grey wall above the bed headboard is a simple yet clever trick to add depth to the room. The glare-free illuminations by indirect lighting create a subtle and comfortable ambience for pleasant sleep. Moderne Design House | www.moderne.hk
